HISTORY OF REGENSBURG

View of Regensburg, Schedel's World History: "Buch der Chroniken und geschichten, mit figuren und pildnussen von anbeginn der welt"

As Goethe once proclaimed: "Regensburg is beautifully situated. The area had to attract a city...". Four rivers unite: a perfect trading hub – the Danube a massive protection to the north. Findings dating back to the Stone Age show the attractiveness of the region.

The first historical records date back to 79 AD, when the Romans built a cohort camp for 1,500 men in what is now Kumpfmühl. The camp fell in the Marcomannic Wars in the 160s.

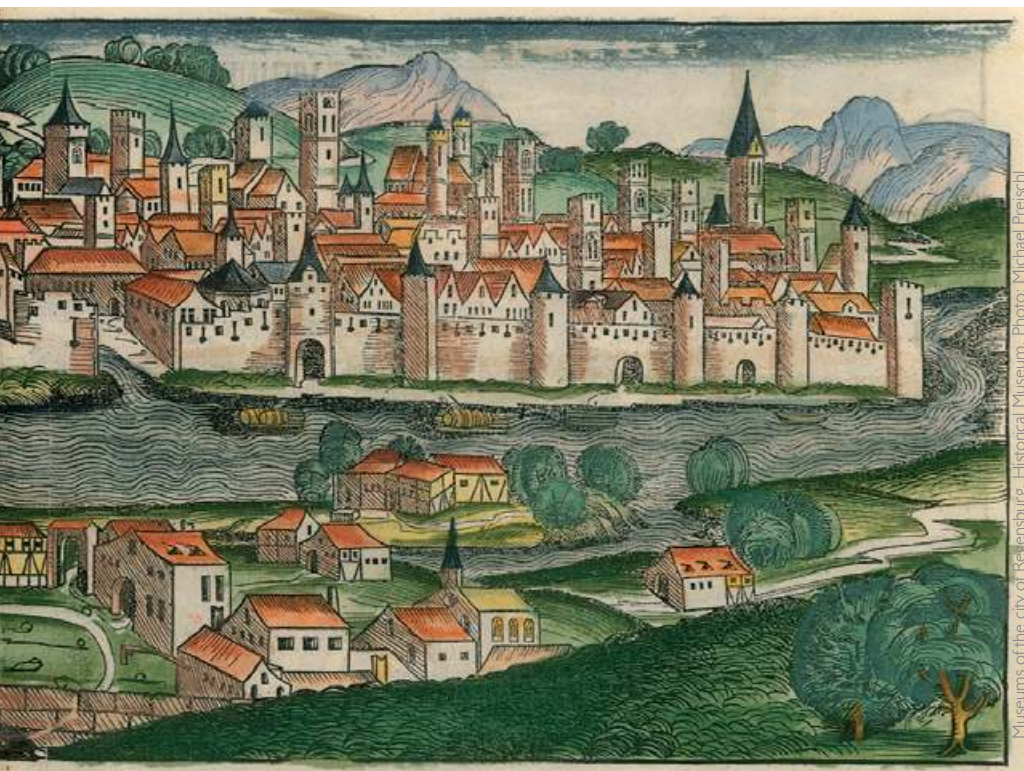

179 AD the mighty Castra Regina (540m x 540m, for 6000 soldiers) was completed under the Roman Emperor Marc Aurel to secure the empire to the north. Thus, Regensburg has the oldest written foundation charter of Germany, a stone plate with 7x1 meters, which once hung above the east gate of the city.

The „great migration of peoples“ changed the face of the ancient world. The next records date from the 6th century, when „Baiern“ was already the duchy of Agilolfingen with Regensburg as the dukedom and first capital.

In the 12th - 13th century Regensburg reached its golden age due to long-distance trade and was considered the most populous city in southern Germany. Around the town hall, rich merchant families built ever larger districts, partly with tall towers, which still dominate the townscape today. Around 1250, Regensburg rose to the status of imperial city. The town grew steadily, including the fortification and the number of monasteries. Gothic and Romanesque architecture now dominates the townscape.

In the 14th century, battles of the patrician families with the craft guilds and the Hussite wars started Regensburg's descent. Vienna, Ulm, Nuremberg and Augsburg profited from the relocation of trade routes. At this time, the Duchy of Bavaria and the respective emperors fought for the membership of the impoverished city.

In a brief vacuum of power in 1519, Regensburg was already anticipating the later National Socialism. In February the largest Jewish community in Germany was driven out of the city out of envy and jealousy. Residential quarters, synagogue and school were wiped out, the cemetery with approximately 4200 gravestones was desecrated. The Regensburg Nazis raged even worse.

From 1633 onwards, Regensburg was the seat of the „Immerwährenden Reichstag“ (first German parliament). In 1745, the Principal Commissioner (permanent representative of the Emperor; always the reigning Prince of Thurn and Taxis) moved his seat to Regensburg.

In 1800, the French army occupied Regensburg in the coalition wars and raised taxes on military expenditure. This completely ruined the already disastrous city coffer, which was already ruined by mismanagement.

In 1803, one of the last decisions of the Reichstag was made: the initiation of the dissolution of the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation as a consequence of the lost coalition wars. Regensburg became a principality in this territorial reorganization.

In 1809, Napoleonic troops stormed the city, which had been occupied by Austrians for three days. This led to a terrible fire. In 1810 Regensburg was incorporated into the Kingdom of Bavaria.

Now it became quiet and peaceful. It was not until the beginning of the 20th century that the development of the city picked up momentum again - as the centre of Upper Palatinate. However, it took decades after the Second World War for the city and the inhabitants of the cultural heritage to become aware of its value and responsibility, and for the city's urban planning to change course. Regensburg is becoming more and more beautiful - even if there are still many, many old sins to be paid off.

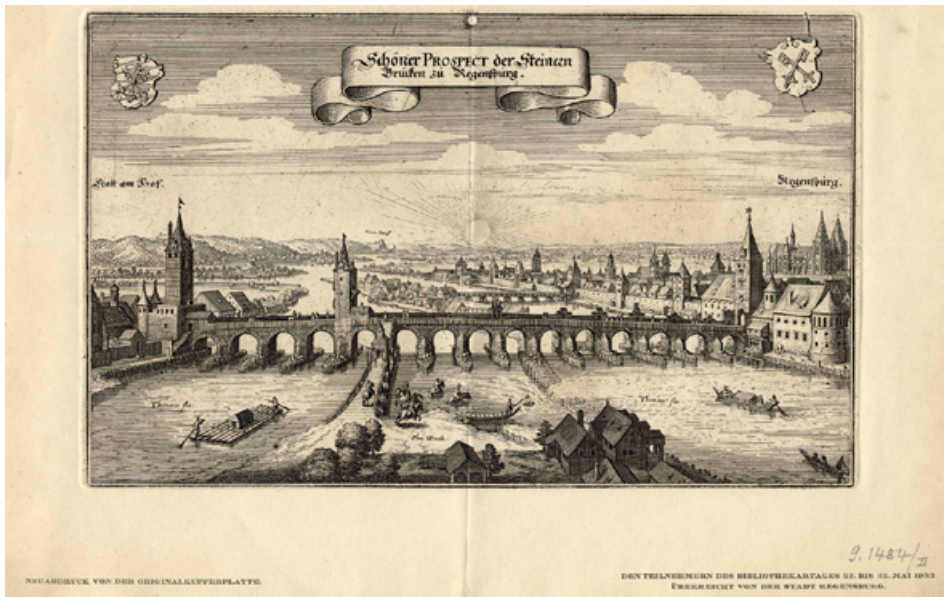

STEINERNE BRÜCKE A

The Bavarian Duke Henry X the Proud (1102/1108 - 1139) started constructing the Stone Bridge in 1135 to replace an inadequate ship bridge across the Danube. The Stone Bridge, built in the Romanesque architectural style, originally consisted of 16 round arches and had a total length of over 330 meters. However, after the construction of the Salzstadel in 1487, one of the arches in the former Wiedfangkanal (in the bridge driveway from the old town) was filled up. The arches have a span of ten to 17 meters, and the bottom side of the stilts is fitted with icebreakers. The riverbed was reinforced to stabilize the piers, initially with stones, today with concrete, creating Regensburg's legendary Danube swirls.

In the 13th century, the Stone Bridge was equipped with three defense towers. In 1810, the „Black Tower“ near Stadtamhof, along with its ditches, small defense towers, and drawbridge, was removed due to war damage. The central tower became unstable due to an ice storm and was demolished in 1784. The only tower still standing today is the Brück- or Schuldurm on the town side, whose clock and painting were redesigned after the battles of the 30-year war.

A historical copper engraving of the „Schöner Prospect der Steinern Brücken zu Regensburg“ from the 18th century illustrates how magnificently the towers once enthroned on the Stone Bridge.

At the highest point of the Stone Bridge, you will find the „Bruckmandl“ looking south. The meaning of the manikin, which was erected in 1446, has not been fully clarified to this day. While some assume him to indicate the directions of the compass, others believe him to be the master bridge builder of the city's tales, looking anxiously in the cathedral's direction to check the progress of its construction. Until today, the inscription on the pillar testifies the start and completion of the medieval wonder of the world:

„Eilf hundert dreissigfünf im jar
Die tonaw war schier trucken gar;
Du hertzog Heinrich mit der stat
Die brucku alhie begunen hat.
Das Werk gebawt vff vesten grund
Eilf jar darnach gantz fertig stund.
Gut gleit fürbas vff allen wegen
Geb gots genad und gottes segnen.“

PORTA PRAETORIA & CASTRA REGINA

Castra Regina was established under the Emperor Marc Aurel in 179 AD as a military camp for 6000 men with its strategic location being the northernmost point on the Danube. This fort was approximately 450 x 550 metres large with a V-shaped surrounding ditch measuring 6 metres wide and 3 metres deep. The 70-90 cm wall base (on which the fort wall measuring 1.8 metres thick and 9 metres high stood with its 30 towers and 4 entrance gates) can still be seen today at certain places including the porta praetoria, the Dachauplatz multi-storey car park, Am Königshof, and Ernst-Reuter- Platz. The north gate of the fort, once called Porta Aquarium (water gate), was renamed after the completion of the street 'Via Praetoria', from where it got its present name, Porta Praetoria. The area was unearthed in 1890 after it was included in the construction of the Bischöfliches Brauhaus (bishop's brewery) in the late Middle Ages. The prevailing view is that it used to be a double gate with two arches and an east and west tower. The towers each had 2 floors with 5 round-arched windows to defend against attacks. Another windowed storey was also located above their 4-metre wide doors. The archway still in existence is made from 13 tapered limestones which fit against each other to exact precision. Along with the larger Porta Nigra in Trier (180 AD), the Porta Praetoria is the oldest above-ground structure north of the Alps.

Salt routes are the oldest trading routes in Europe, twisting from Italy up over the Alps to the north and east. Salt was often so valuable that many soldiers had their wages paid out in salt rather than money. During the 13th century, however, salt originated from the salt mines of Reichenhall from where it travelled through Passau and then up the Danube to Regensburg. From there, it would be further distributed at the most important transfer station of that day and age. The buying and selling of this 'white gold' was run by the salt lords and was only taken over by the state in the 16th century. Horse-drawn carts, with often as many as 40 horses per cart, would bring the salt to the depot (Salzstadel) up until 1616. The salt would be stored in 3 main floors and 5 additional attic floors that were equipped with a complex rope-pull system to manage the flourishing trade. As the original wood construction of the depot could not bear the weight of the salt, the wood beams were later replaced by stone supports. The depot was completely restored in 1991.

As Regensburg qualified as a free city, it had the right to collect tolls from ships. The ships would travel through a channel (the Wiedfang channel which has since been filled in) and would be charged a toll. The province of Bavaria wanted to avoid paying this toll so built another salt depot in Stadtmhof in 1600 and pulled their „bavarian“ ships here, passing the north side of the stone bridge. In 1606 the city of Regensburg hired Hanns Heygl, also a captain, to take control of the situation. He stood watch on the bridge with his mighty axe, where he would hack the ropes of the „bavarian“ ships as they were pulled through the bridge and so sent them back into the dangerous currents.

D THE SHELTER OF THE ILLUMINATI

The founder of the Illuminati, Adam Weishaupt, lived in the Engelburggasse 8 in Regensburg from 1785 to 1787. On May 1st 1776, the order of the 'Federation of the Perfectibilists' was founded by Weishaupt in Ingolstadt. Despite what many films and books claim, the goal of the order had nothing to do with sinister and evil powers. On the contrary - a 'light of reason' which was long oppressed by church dogmas was to be exposed in order to create a new world order. The aim was a complete reform of the government, religion, and education. Virtue, wisdom, and science should prevail over persecution and despotism. High-ranking noblemen and celebrities of the time, such as Goethe, became members of the Illuminati.

In 1785, the Bavarian sovereign Karl Theodor banned the Illuminati in the whole of Bavaria. Adam Weishaupt fled to what was then the free city of Regensburg on 16th of February 1785 dressed as a craftsman. On July 20th 1785, the priest and fellow Illuminati member Johann Jakob Lanz visited him. As both were walking near the city gate, they encountered a heavy storm. As if God was outraged by his bold affiliation with the Illuminati, Lanz was struck by lightning and he was killed immediately. A list of members of the Illuminati was found in his clothing. The free city of Regensburg was then pressured to extradite Weishaupt. Weishaupt fled from Regensburg to Gotha's ducal court in 1787. However, the Illuminati continued to be slandered and persecuted while Weishaupt attempted to clear his name and rehabilitate the order. He never succeeded in doing this and later died in 1830.

E KEPLERHAUS

Johannes Kepler is renowned for his established laws on physics and planetary movement theories. Born on Dec 27th 1571, he lived in two different houses in Regensburg. He died in the Keplerhaus in 1630. Kepler taught in Linz and had to leave Regensburg frequently to support his mother who was accused of witchcraft in Leonberg and Göggingen, or to spend time in Ulm where he printed the Rudolphic tables. Kepler travelled to many cities with the title 'the emperor's mathematician', and moved to Sagan in 1628 to serve for General Wallenstein. However, he left part of his belongings behind in Regensburg which indicated that he did intend to return one day. Amongst these belongings was a handwritten list of his possessions. This list is currently on display in the Keplerhaus. Having returned and while travelling on to Linz, Kepler became extremely ill in Regensburg and died very suddenly. He is buried in an unknown location in Regensburg's inner city.

GOLIATHHAUS F

The 'Goliath House' (Goliathhaus), built in 1260, is considered one of the most well-known landmarks of Regensburg with its painting of David and Goliath from the year 1573. Along with Haus Heuport, this is the largest 'city castle' in the inner city and is located on the southern base of the old Roman fort. It is likely that the name is not derived from the biblical epic, but rather from the name 'Goliards'. Theology students were called Goliards after their guardian angel "Goliard". It is believed that the present Goliath house was built on the location of the quarters in which the travellers often stayed. The house was subsequently the headquarters of the Tundorfer patrician family, later being taken over by the Dollingers, Mallers and the Tucher patricians from Nuremberg.

G RATHAUS, REICHSTAG & FRAGSTATT

Regensburg City Hall was built over multiple centuries. The tower which was built in 1260 is especially noteworthy. This 55-metre high tower forms part of Regensburg's postcard silhouette. Even more well-renowned is the Reichssaal (Parliament Hall). Not only important as a work of art, the Reichsaal was also the location of the first German Parliament. This parliament was not democratically elected. The emperor was required to meet with a collection of representatives in order to make legal, administrative, and military decisions.

The location of the Reichstag continued to change from city to city up until 1663, when it became the 'perpetual parliament' based in Regensburg. Because representatives were not physically present, a congress of ministers would continually meet to represent the rulers, princes, electors, and imperial cities. But the City Hall was not just a place for conventions and intellectual discussions; powerful forms of persuasion were practiced in the cellar to expose the truth. The torture chamber in Regensburg is one-of-a-kind in Germany and should be on every visitor's list. Everything has been left in its original condition; from the chamber layout to each device and contraption. Pain interrogation had been implemented since the beginning of the 14th century to force confessions, as a confession was imperative for an official conviction. An extraordinary tour through the basement of the city hall will show the prison cells and torture instruments. This trip back through time is an absolute must!

H SCHLOSS ST. EMMERAM, THURN UND TAXIS

The former abbey and Benedictine monastery at St. Emmeram has been owned by the Thurn und Taxis royal family since 1812. The royal family moved to Regensburg in 1748 to represent the emperor at the 'perpetual Reichstag'. After the old empire was dissolved, Prince Karl Alexander received the monastery as partial compensation for surrendering his rights to the Bavarian postal system to the state. During the 19th century, this complex comprising several hundred rooms was reconstructed to create one of the largest private residences in Europe. The museum area of the residence, cloister, royal stables and treasure chamber provide a comprehensive insight to 1000 years of monastery tradition, as well as the lifestyle of one of the most important aristocratic families in Europe. Experience the cloisters with its medieval flair, or enjoy the splendour of the rococo manor house and European craftsmanship in the treasure chambers. The royal stables, which were originally constructed in 1832, are now home to the carriage museum. With over 70 vehicles and carriages, it is the hugest collection of aristocratic carriages in the world.

This square is named after the Reich Chancellor Otto von Bismarck. It has been a traffic intersection dating as far back as the 'Castr Regina' times, where it was located in front of the fort's Roman wall. In medieval times, the square was home to an arsenal, granary, corn warehouse, and stables. The presidential headquarters (now the police headquarters) are located at the north end of the square. It was built by the then prince and Archbishop of Regensburg, Carl von Dalberg in 1805 for the French envoy and 'perpetual parliament'. This building was the first to introduce classicism to the city. The six massive limestone columns with Corinthian capitals are especially striking. Its counterpart across the square is the city theatre built for public use in 1804. The theatre was previously only accessible to nobles and the elite. In 1980/81, the square was renovated to accommodate an underground garage. This construction project added the two water fountains, a new cobbled surface, and the southern terrace. Over the south-west corner of the square is the Benedictine Abbey of St. Jakob.

I BISMARCKPLATZ

Across the square in the north-eastern corner is the Erbprinzenpalais (Palace to the Heir to the Throne), which Otto Krafft v. Prüfening built as a hostel for the cloister in 1701. Since 1815, this has been owned by Thurn & Taxis. Nestled in the south-eastern corner near the police headquarters, is the Schneckbachhaus. Here, the first evangelical service in Regensburg was held in 1541. The building received its current Baroque-styled make-over in 1742. It also served as legation for the Duke of Württemberg.

J

Haidplatz derives its name from a wasteland that is sparsely overgrown, known as a 'Haide'. The 'Haid' as it was often referred to as, was originally much larger and open. During the middle ages, the square shrunk in size due to surrounding construction, but it still offered ample room for various events.

Documents from the 12th century state that the 'Haid' had been host for large Knight Tournaments, and one chronicle reported over 300 knights for a particular tournament in 1393. The area also attracted many jugglers, inventors, and exhibitionists to perform. In 1673 there was a legendary performance by the Frenchman Charles Bernovin, who fell to his death as he attempted to tight-rope across the square strapped with fireworks to his body. This square is enclosed by several historical buildings, such as the "Neue Waag" or 'New Scale' (Haidplatz 1); a patrician house that was changed in 1441 to the "Stadtwaage" or "City Scales". The 'Arch' (Haidplatz 3 & 4) is a veritable Gothic construction, whose massive front defines the square with its overwhelming appearance.

The former inn, 'Zum Goldenen Kreuz' (to the Golden Cross) has a castle-like look and once served as quarters for high-ranking diplomats, princes, kings, and emperors. The elegant facade of Haidplatz 8 is the Thon-Dittmer-Palais. This complex holds the Department of Culture, the city library, the adult educational centre, and a theatre. The 4 wings of the building enclose an intimate courtyard, which is used today for open-air events. In the basement of the south wing is an area for various art exhibitions as well as the 14th century Sigismund Chapel.

ALTER KORNMARKT K

The Romans had used this area to house their officers, prefects, crew quarters, and baths. In 400 AD, the Germanic tribe called the Bavarii, left the Castra Regina, and declared Regensburg the capital of Bavaria with the Kornmarkt as their residence. The residence was expanded in 850 for the Carolingian palace in addition to the Palatinate Chapel (later called the Old Chapel), which were added at this time. The emperor, bishops, and representatives also held their meetings for the Reich (empire) here. The 'Herzogshof' (Duke's Court) is now a hotel worth seeing! It is still maintained by the Wittelsbachern, who resided in the building until 1245. The Herzogshof is connected with an arched buttress to the Römerturm or Roman tower, formerly known as the Heidenturm or Pagan-Tower. The tower is 28 meters high with four meter thick walls. It served as a place of refuge from attacks, as well as an archive and treasure chamber. For a long period of time the Kornmarkt was used not only for impressive military parades and tournaments, but also bloodthirsty justice of the middle ages. Up until 1830, it served as the grain market for Regensburg, which was later moved to Haidplatz. Neighboring the Kornmarkt is the Niedermünsterstift (Niedermünstergasse), a convent housing the resting place of Saint Erhard (700AD). The convent was rather liberal as it allowed women to withdraw from sisterhood and even wed after retirement. The convent had connections to the house of the Bavarian Duke and enjoyed many imperial freedoms, which remained in place until secularization. The Niedermünster Church is actually the 4th church to stand here today. All four churches have had the exact same measurements, beginning at the head of Saint Erhard's tomb. Also located on the square is the Karmelitenkloster St. Josef (Carmelite Cloister), whose foundation was laid in 1641 by Emperor Ferdinand III and completed in 1672. The 'Echter Regensburger Karmelitengeist' (medicinal water) was created by Father Ulrich Eberskirch in 1721 and is very well known. Noteworthy here is the western façade in baroque style.

The building at the Alter Kornmarkt, known as the Herzogshof today, is only the eastern part of the former Herzogshof, which was rebuilt in 1937. The western building complexes were demolished in the same year.

The Herzogshof originated in the 6th century as the residence of the first dukes of Bavaria. In the 9th century, it served as the royal palace of the Carolingian and Ottonian kings and emperors. At the end of the 12th century, it became the Bavarian ducal palace and residence of the Wittelsbach dynasty for about 50 years. After the Wittelsbachs moved to Munich, the buildings and lands remained in the possession of the Bavarian state until the beginning of the 20th century and housed various Bavarian administrative offices. In the 20th century, the Domplatz was redesigned and the western part of the Herzogshof was demolished. The remaining part of the western building was rebuilt in the process as part of the romanization.

M SCHOTTENKIRCHE - SCHOTTENPORTAL

Irish Benedictine monks (Scotti in the vernacular language referred to the Gaels of Ireland and Scotland) founded the St. Jakob Abbey in around 1090. Construction of the abbey and portal were finished in 1200. It is considered one of the most meaningful works of occidental art. Experts believe that all of the figures portrayed were once painted and some even gold or silver-plated with the holes being once filled with gems. The exact interpretation or meaning of the portal is still in debate. One widely accepted theory by Franz Dietheuer, states: the arch above the door separates the heavens from the last judgement below where Satan, evil beings, infidel Jews, heathens, and bad Christians are all to face trial. Christ stands in the middle with 6 apostles on each side to create an even balance. Flanked on the outside are two saints: Emperor Charlemagne and Archbishop Patrick. The other figures and numerous arches have received many interpretations ranging from the planetary motions, wind, signs of earth, the antichrist Saladin, and further interpretation is still required today. Most theories have religious connotations dealing with Judgement Day and the resurrection. The monastery was then run by Scottish abbots in 1520. Despite it being well managed, it declined during the trials and tribulations of secularization. The administration was passed on to bishops in 1866, and the building has since been used as a priest seminary.

N REGENSBURGER DOM

Regensburg's St. Peter's Cathedral is a UNESCO world heritage site, a unique example of French Gothic in Southern Germany and a landmark for the city of Regensburg. Its construction began in around 1275/76, and it is one of the most significant churches both in Bavaria and beyond. Today's visitors are met by a cathedral which is built in a broadly uniform architectural style. This includes medieval glazing with around 1100 stained glass panes from between 1310 to 1450 - the largest collection of medieval original glass north of the Alps. The cathedral is populated by a large number of stone sculptures. The artistic highlight is the annunciation group with the Virgin Mary and the smiling angel. His expression is a masterpiece of European significance. The tone of the cathedral organ, which was installed in 2009, is one of the very best. Weighing 37 tonnes, with 8571 pipes and 80 ranks, it is one of the largest hanging organs in the world. Together with the singing from the Regensburg Domspatzen choir, it fills the space within the cathedral with music in praise of God and for people's enjoyment.

Although the cathedral's construction had already begun around 1275/76, 600 years were to pass before the building work on the cathedral was finally completed. This significant delay was caused to some parts by a considerable lack of space as the ecclesiastical legal area within Regensburg was limited. Only one hundred years after the construction started, the entire building area was cleared to pursue the original plans. Moreover, reformation movements in the 16th century led to a halt in construction from around 1525. When work resumed about one hundred years later, multiple redesigns caused additional delays in the building process. After the secularization in 1810, the cathedral was again undergoing a radical redesign. With the completion of the spires (1869) and the transept gable (1872), the cathedral was finalized after 600 years of construction.

O DREIEINIGKEITSKIRCHE

The Church of the Holy Trinity, located on the Gesandtenstrasse, was built in the midst of the Thirty Years War. This was one of the first evangelical churches in Bavaria. Construction began on July 4th 1627, and was completed only four-and-a-half years later on December 5th 1631. The original benches dating back to 1630-31 are still used today. The intricate wood carvings on the back of the choir chairs are a highlight especially worth seeing. The poor box, which dates back to 1632, originally stood in the middle isle but is now located in a showcase near the pulpit rise.

The original design of the church was supposed to come from the architect Matthias Stang from Pfalz-Neuburg, but because it arrived too late, Johann Carl from Nuremberg, an armourer, fortress architect and engineer, was commissioned. This design has regional and Dutch influences, with the flat look of the longhouse which resembles the Lusthaus in Stuttgart designed by Georg Beers. The structure also conforms to other building styles in Regensburg with a tower homogenous to the Jakobskirche and Neupfarrkirche. Particularly interesting is the columnless design of longhouse; the gallery is actually the only thing supported in the building by columns.

Paintings in the church, such as the full body portrait of Luther and Melancthon, originate from the 17th century. Other attractions include the small cemetery, running as a narrow strip alongside the church, which includes a row of baroque-styled grave monuments, as well as the last resting place of former foreign parliament members. But above all, do not forget to climb up the tower where you can enjoy breath-taking views of the 'old city'!

Regensburg had one of the oldest Jewish communities in Germany, with a Talmud school as well as a cemetery located on the outskirts of the city. The community, including students, had a population between 400-600 people and created a 'city within a city'. This micro-city was located at the present day Neupfarrplatz and included some surrounding buildings: approximately 30 houses were connected with bridges and underground passageways. It was a walled-in enclosure with many doorways that separated it from the Christian community surrounding it. The "ghetto" was destroyed in 1519, triggered perhaps by Regensburg's economic depression, jealousy and antisemitism. After the death of Emperor Maximilian I, who had guaranteed protection for the Jews, the Christian community quickly displayed their long withheld hatred. Council members confronted the Jewish community and gave them 4 days to leave the city. They were allowed to take all their personal belongings, except the Christian objects that the Jews held as collateral from business trades. To their own dismay, the Jews chose to destroy their holy objects that they could not take with them rather than hand them over to the Christians. During the winter months, the Jews were then driven out of the city. Two ships were provided in the Danube for the Jews to leave, while many settled across the river in Stadthof, or went on to Sallern. Demolition of the ghetto was quick and even described as 'God's work'.

Maria's chapel of worship was erected shortly thereafter, and the people celebrated with a pilgrimage. The square was a parking area until 1995, when it was redesigned and excavation unearthed parts of the synagogue and many mugs with golden coins.

STADTAMHOF

In the middle ages, with about 2000 inhabitants, Stadtamhof was a small Bavarian neighborhood in the middle of the independent city Regensburg and thus often a hot bed of conflict. Earliest evidence shows that this area was first settled in 981 as an estate belonging to the Emmeram Cloister. It reached city status in 1496, and in 1924 became incorporated with the city of Regensburg. It sunk deep into poverty after the war, before flourishing to its present day charm.

The clock still ticks a bit different in Stadtamhof, even today. Residents enjoy the offset location on the banks of the Danube where they are a stone's throw to the city, yet still set apart. Small shops and stores are still run by the same families generations old. You stumble upon many picturesque nooks and idyllic courtyards. Its' historical status also offers many sights worth seeing such as the Rococo church and the former Monastery Church St. Mang. The 2-story former salt depot, Andreasstadel (Andreas Depot) is also quite interesting. Today it is a hotel, cafe, art academy, movie theatre and houses private apartments. The depot, dating back to the 16th century, originally competed with the larger salt trade across the river and is the oldest secular building still standing in Stadtamhof today. Across the Europa Canal is the city's main gate and a restored locomotive from the Valhalla train, which up until 1960 brought passengers to Wörth an der Donau. Also in existence today is the Katharine Hospital and Spitalkirche (Hospital Church), along with their ever beloved and spacious beer garden.

PARK AND AVENUE CIRCUIT

Regensburg's old town is surrounded by a green belt of beautiful parks and avenues in different shapes and sizes.

„Hikers“ can marvel at the former town fortifications and enjoy stunning views of the city, its various quarters, and the river Danube.

The loop has a length of 7.5 km and offers various detours to adjacent parks. You are free to start your walk at any location along the way.

In the Middle Ages, this green area surrounded the city wall of that district. Today, you still can find the four-story Prebrunn Tower and the walls of the former Prebrunn Bastion (1665). Visitors can discover architectural monuments and stroll through beautiful floral areas, botanical education, and Renaissance gardens, which spread over 1.5 hectares. You will find the Natural History Museum of Eastern Bavaria adjacent to the south.

PREBRUNNALLE 2

Prince Carl Anselm von Thurn und Taxis purchased land here and, in the late 17th century, converted the former farms and bastions into this green strip.

STADTPARK (side trip) A

Comprising 8 hectares, the Stadtpark (city park) is the largest and oldest park. In the 15th century, it was used as a festival and shooting range. The East German Gallery, restaurants and a lake make a beautiful and quiet recreational area in close proximity to the city.

FÜRST-ANSELM-ALLEE 3 4

The route continues across the Platz der Einheit, leads into the Fürst-Anselm-Allee, and proceeds further alongside the castle.

DÖRNBERGPARK (side trip) B

In 1804, the Jewish banker and the court's merchant Phillip Reichenberger built a suburban villa, known today as the Dörnberg Palais. Ernst-Friedrich von Dörnberg, the head administrator of the local princes, later acquired it to expand its own land and designed an English-style park including 1400 trees. Some of the park's buildings, such as the Rosarium or the Gesellschaftshaus (performance venue), still exist.

OSTENALLEE 5

After crossing Maximilianstrasse, we proceed to Ostenallee, which, along with Prebrunnallee, forms the 3rd part of the original Fürst-Anselm-Allee. In the late 17th century that entire belt might have counted 2,000 trees. The imposing Ostentor marks the end of this area.

VILLAPARK 6

In this romantic park, that offers open-air theater performances during summer, you will find the former royal residence, called the „royal villa“. In 1852, King Maximilian II extended his stay in Regensburg to improve his health. This laid the ground for the construction of a residence meeting royal requirements, which the city paid for: in return, the king donated to the city three secularized canonical courts and the small castle of Barbing. From here you can proceed along the river Danube towards the old town.

You have to cross the iron bridge to reach the Unter 7 Wöhrd. From here you have two options, both are worth seeing: The red route leads you across the Grieser Steg to the Jahninsel. From here you have a nice view of Stadthof. The orange route leads you along the south bank of the Oberer Wöhrd where you will find pubs and picture-perfect views of the old town. You can return to the Herzogspark by crossing

8 the INSELPARK and the dam.

RIVER TOURS

Regensburg - the city of rivers where the Danube, Naab, and Regen meet. However, only the Danube can be navigated by motor power. With 2,849 kilometers, it connects ten countries on its way from Germany to the Danube Delta in Ukraine and moves, among others, through Passau, Linz, Vienna, Bratislava, and Budapest. From Kelheim upstream, the Danube is no longer navigable by ship (except for public passenger navigation). Here the Main-Danube Canal branches off to the north and creates a navigable waterway to Rotterdam.

If you are staying in Regensburg, you should not miss the view from the waterside. There are several exit points accessible by regular ships.

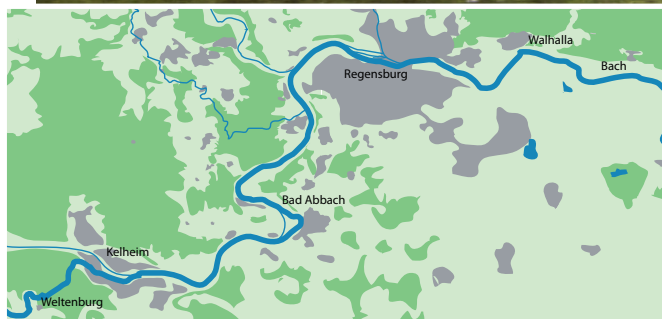

THE DANUBE BREAKTHROUGH & WELTENBURG ①

This full-day tour departs Regensburg in the morning and moves upstream via Bad Abbach to Kelheim. Upon arrival, we continue with a ship with less drought and head to the nature reserve „Weltenburger Enge“ and the Danube breakthrough, whose rock formations rise to 80 meters into the air. The Weltenburg monastery awaits passengers with full gastronomy services including a brewery. The famous monastery church was decorated by the Asam brothers in 1721. Its style is world-famous today. According to local but disputed records, the monastery dates back to the early 6th century. The trip ends with the return to Regensburg in the early evening. The cost per person is around 35 euros, depending on the season.

SWIRL TOURS & CITY TOURS ②

At roughly one hour, these tours are shorter and offer beautiful views of Regensburg's scenery. The trip goes up to the weir and under the Stone Bridge to Regensburg's harbor area while crossing the Regensburg swirls along the way. These are created by the wide bridge piers of the Stone Bridge interrupting the water flow. For centuries, cargo ships struggled to pass them.

Horses and later winches pulled the vessels through this area with its steep gradient. Only in 1978 the Europe Canal and its lock were built to the north, making the planned demolition of the Stone Bridge obsolete. During floods, you can still see the extreme force of the water in the bridge area. The cost per person, depending on the season, is about 10 euros.

walk and a guided tour of the historic „Silberschacht“ gemstone mine. The cost per person for a half-day trips is around 16 euros, depending on the season.

TRIP TO THE WALHALLA / BACH 3

Downstream, the imposing Walhalla, including a guided tour, is worth a visit. Alternatively, you can take a boat to Bach to pay homage to Regensburg's wine. In Bach, visitors can visit small wine taverns, the BaierWeinMuseum, or take a short

R WALHALLA

The Walhalla stands majestically above Donaustauf, just over six miles east of Regensburg – a vast temple of marble. It rears up out of the dark greenery around and can be seen on the horizon from far away with its huge entrance.

Initiated by the Bavarian King Ludwig I, a significant, neoclassical edifice in the Doric style was created by the architect Leo von Klenze. It is not only the exterior that presents a tremendous picture but the interior as well, the „Cella“: an impressive pantheon. This was opened on October 18th, 1842, after 12 years of construction. It houses 128 marble busts decorated with gold ornaments and 64 tablets depicting significant themes from Germanic mythology. Some of the luminaries featured are Johannes Kepler, Immanuel Kant, Martin Luther and many more. King Ludwig I is also represented by a statue, which was erected for him in 1890.

The entire light-grey marble structure is approximately 130 metres long, 91 metres wide and 60 metres high. The temple itself is 20 metres high, approximately 70 metres long and around 35 metres wide. It is carried by 52 pillars, and the roof is supported by six goddesses of victory. There are tympani with marble statues at both ends: on the front gable there are also 15 symbolic figures which signify the restoration of Germany after the fight against Napoleon Bonaparte at the beginning of the 19th century. The 15 figures on the gable at the back illustrate the Battle of the Teutoburg Forest. From the steps of the Walhalla you can enjoy the view of the Danube valley.

KUCHLBAUER'S BIERWELT S

It looks like a tower from another age. After more than 10 years of planning and construction, the Kuchlbauer tower in the grounds of the Kuchlbauer Brewery in Abensberg was completed at the end of 2009. The landmark represents one of the last architectural projects by the world-famous artist Friedensreich Hundertwasser, and it brings together the two worlds of beer and art. The tower pays homage to Bavaria's beers and its breweries.

The Brauerei zum Kuchlbauer is located where the beer originated and has one of the world's oldest brewing rights. With Jacob Horsch as executive director, the family has now been working in the brewery trade for nine generations.

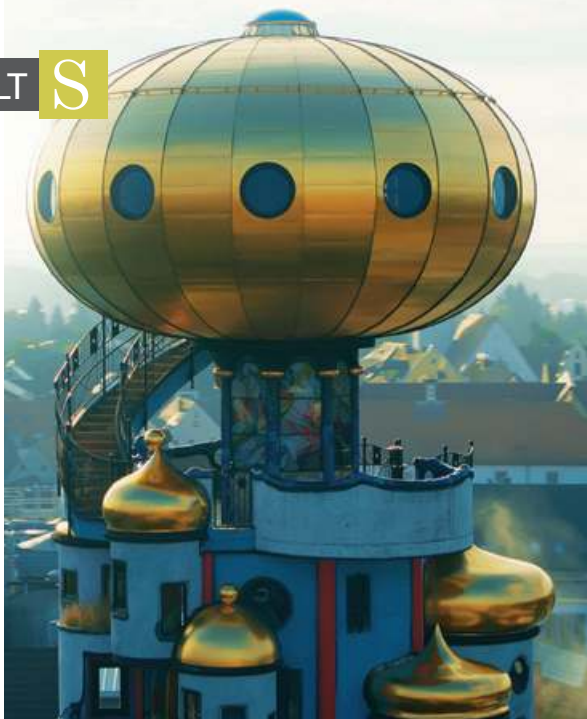

The Kuchlbauer has specialised in brewing wheat beer – known as Weissbier – with the best raw materials right on the doorstep – hops from the Hallertau, malt and wheat from the Bavarian Jura and Gäuboden and water taken from the business's own well.

A tour of the Kuchlbauer's world of beer reveals more about the centuries-old history and brewing traditions of the Weissbier specialist. You can trace the development of the art of brewing and in doing so discover more about this centre for beer craft. Visitors see the brewery and the tower cellar.

You can then explore the 35 metre high landmark and, after successfully negotiating the climb, enjoy the fantastic view over Abensberg from the viewing platform. The visit to the world of beers is rounded off with a glass of beer and a so-called „Breze“.

T BEFREIUNGSHALLE

In Kelheim, the eye is drawn by the Befreiungshalle („Hall of Liberation“). Like the Walhalla in Donaustauf, the Befreiungshalle on Michelsberg was commissioned by King Ludwig I. Friedrich von Gärtner began constructing the hall in 1842. After his death, it was completed by the architect Leo von Klenze in 1863. It was intended as a memorial to the wars of liberation against Napoleon from 1813 to 1815. The building consists of three levels and is made of lime stone. There are 18 statues enthroned all around the outer facade which stand for the battles of the German tribes involved. The number 18 also represents the dates of the Battle of Leipzig (October 18th, 1813) and the Battle of Waterloo (June 18th, 1815). The size of the Befreiungshalle is impressive, at 45 metres in height and 29 metres in diameter. To reach the interior, you have to climb 125 steps.

Forty more steps lead to the terrace, from which you have a good view of the town of Kelheim and the Danube. The opening in the dome lights up the spacious interior.

The walls are arranged in 18 segmental arches. Two goddesses of victory made of white marble stand on pillars in front of each of the arches. They stand with their arms outstretched and are around three metres tall. A total of 34 goddess statues were designed by the sculptor Ludwig Schwanthaler, representing the member states of the German Confederation. There are bronze shields cast from captured guns behind them in the centre.

Above the entrance to the rotunda, which is seven metres high, you can read the carved dedication: DEN TEUTSCHEN BEFREIUNGSKÄMPFERN, LUDWIG I - KOENIG VON BAYERN (To the German freedom fighters, Ludwig I - King of Bavaria). There has been a visitors' centre here since April 2004. The Befreiungshalle celebrated its 150 year anniversary in 2013.

LEGENDS

The little man on Regensburg cathedral.

” On the outside of the chancel, facing North, there is a little man holding a pot above his head who is just about to throw himself off the cathedral. He is said to be the cathedral builder who made a bet with the builder of Stone Bridge - whoever completed the building first, could impose corporal punishment on the loser. When, in the end, the bridge was the first to be completed, the builder had a little stone man placed on a small house in the middle of the bridge, mocking the loser of the bet. The man was looking in the direction of the cathedral and holding a note in his hand with the inscription 'It's hot'. The cathedral builder thereupon threw himself from the uncompleted cathedral in desperation.

How Gunthar became Bishop of Regensburg.

” In AD 938, Otto, Emperor of Germany, ruled over the city of Regensburg. At this particular time the Bishop's seat was empty, and therefore Otto wanted to hand the waiting crozier to another pastor. In a dream, he was commanded to appoint to the pastorate the first person he met in the morning on the way to church. As he made his way the next day, as usual, to St Emmeram, the pious brother Gunthar opened the gates of the monastery to him. The emperor asked him: "Little monk, what will you give me if I hand you the crozier today?" - "If it is sufficient emperor, I can go without my shoes, these you shall have from me." This is how Gunthar became Bishop of Regensburg.

The Dollinger legend.

” It was around the year 930 that Craco, the pagan knight, challenged the Regensburg knights to a duel. King Henry I therefore searched for a knight prepared to face the challenge, but none would dare. At this time, Hans Dollinger, a citizen of Regensburg, was being held in Regensburg jail. In return for his freedom he decided to take up the challenge. He prayed at the grave of the holy Erhard in the Niedermünster church before making his way to the Haidplatz where the tournament would take place. In both the first and the second rounds, Cracos thrust Dollinger out of the saddle, but prior to the third round, King Henry himself pressed a crucifix to the hero's lips and Dollinger succeeded in defeating the enemy.

Dreaming of treasure on the bridge.

” A man once had a dream that he should go to Regensburg and that he would become rich on the bridge. This is precisely where he went every day for two weeks until a rich merchant came to him wondering what he was doing on the bridge all this time and asked him what he was looking for. "I had a dream that I should go to Regensburg and become rich here on the bridge" came the answer. "Oh", replied the merchant, "you talk of dreams, dreams are nothing but lies. I had a dream that a pot of gold was buried under that large tree but I ignored it because dreams are lies." The other man then went to the tree and dug underneath it and promptly found a huge amount of treasure which made him rich.

“History meets nature” at Schlossberg Regenstauf

New life was breathed into the idea from 1871 to use the Schlossberg as a diverse local recreation area by the Schlossberg concept “History Meets Nature”. Parts of the Schlossberg are now designated nature and bird sanctuaries and are home to numerous species of songbirds, birds of prey and owls, woodpeckers and smaller mammals. Of course, a visit to the Schlossberg tower, the Lourdes Grotto, the castle fountain and the information centre “History meets Nature” is part of an exploration around the Schlossberg.

Well-developed walking paths and a multitude of benches invite you to enjoy this unique natural landscape. The panorama terrace of the Schloßbergturnm also offers a special panoramic view of the surrounding landscape. Especially worth seeing is the information center, that was built a few years ago below the Schlossberg restaurant. Here, a wonderful connection between history and nature was achieved - expressed by unique wooden objects, e.g. an interactive bird call clock and an animal and trace guessing table. A special feature for little adventurers is the knights' playground next to the information centre. Information on guided tours can be found on the homepage of the mountain club at: www.bergverein-regenstauf.de.

Regenstau in the heart of the Bavarian Jura

Whether by, on or in the water, in the picturesque Regental around Regenstau you can enjoy “pure nature”. From hiking, walking, cycling and skating to swimming, boating, stand up paddling and fishing, everything is possible in the charming “market-land-river-region”.

Nature-loving hikers should definitely walk the paths of the Burgensteig. This path, marked with a knight's symbol, leads you through the idyllic valley of the Regental - passing stony witnesses of the Upper Palatinate's history and surrounded by magnificent natural landscapes. In addition to the Burgensteig, there are many other hiking trails of varying lengths (2 to 16 km). Thus, you can choose a suitable path for every level of fitness. New are the accessible hiking trails you can find in the Wanderkarte Regenstau and the brochure Einfach Wandern!

Two beautiful bicycle paths are located in the Regenstau district. The cycle path “Naab-Regen-Radweg” leads via the district of Eitlbrunn into the centre of Regenstau and merges seamlessly into the cycle path “Regentalradweg”. Passing the “Regenauen Markt” on the way out, it takes you past beautiful meadows and flowering strips. Here you can often see the storks that live in Regenstau, looking for food.

Among water tourists, the river “Regen” is considered one of the most beautiful rivers in Bavaria. With its old riverbeds and tranquility waters, the rain contains numerous fish species such as eel, barbel, perch, pike, catfish, zander or whitefish and is therefore an El Dorado for anglers.

V DANUBE GORGE & WELTENBURG MONASTERY

Danube Gorge

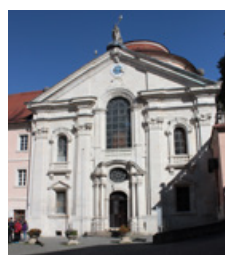

The Danube Gorge with its up to 80-metre-high rock walls lies between Kelheim and the town of Weltenburg. The narrow passage between the Stille Wand and the Lange Wand, where the water has dug the riverbed up to 20 metres deep, is particularly well known. A few kilometres further downstream – before Kelheim – is the shallowest part of the Danube between Ingolstadt and Regensburg. At low water you can even wade through it.

Geologically, the Danube flows here in the Upper Jurassic, the formation richest in fossils in Germany. However, contrary to its name, it has not broken through anything here – these were tributaries in earlier times. The Danube itself has only been flowing here since the last ice age (before that it used the lower Altmühl valley) and has also only dug out 15 metres of riverbed.

Weltenburg Monastery

There are various theories as to when the monastery was built, ranging from 700 AD to around 800 AD. During and after various wars, the monastery was repeatedly abandoned and then repopulated. Since 1686 it has belonged to the Bavarian Benedictine Congregation, interrupted in the course of secularisation in 1802-1846 and finally elevated to the status of an abbey again in 1913 by Prince Regent Ludwig (later King). In 1716-1718, the Weltenburg monastery church was built within the building complex and dedicated to St. George. Until 1735, it was largely designed by the Asam brothers, who as sculptors, stuccoers, painters and architects are among the most important representatives of the German late Baroque. There is evidence that the monks were already brewing in Weltenburg in 1050, which is probably why it is the oldest monastery brewery in the world.

Schwandorf

The city of Schwandorf is the vibrant and modern center of the up-and-coming tourist region of the Upper Palatine Lakeland. The city offers its visitors various shopping opportunities and popular restaurants in a cozy old town environment. The many lakes in close vicinity invite sailors, surfers and bathers to jump into the cool waters, and offer a gorgeous scenery for biking tours and hikes. A special highlight is the Klausensee, one of the warmest bathing lakes in Bavaria, which also impresses with its outstanding water quality. Below the city lies the largest rock cellar labyrinth of Bavaria. The 60 connected cellar rooms can be visited in guided tours.

KUNSTFORUM OSTDEUTSCHE GALERIE

The Kunstforum Ostdeutsche Galerie is an art museum with an exceptional collection of modern art and a unique focus on the Eastern European artistic scene. Following in the footsteps of German artists who used to live and work there, you can dive into art history and discover the story behind each piece of art. Changing exhibitions also focus on contemporary art in East-Central Europe and explore current issues. In 2024, three exhibitions are scheduled: following „We love Picasso“ (until January 7, 2024) is „Peter Grau 1928–2016. The Etchings“ (February 9 to April 7, 2024). The next exhibition honors the recipient of the Lovis Corinth Prize 2024, Ewa Partum (May 17 to September 8, 2024). The final show is dedicated to illustrations for the texts of Franz Kafka (October 12, 2024, to January 12, 2025).

The permanent exhibition's motto is “Where do we come from, where are we going?” Visitors embark on a journey through time and to various historical locations. They encounter artistic personalities such as Lovis Corinth, Käthe Kollwitz, Sigmar Polke, Gerhard Richter and Katharina Sieverding. As an example of art in architecture, the red installation by Magdalena Jetelová enlivens the museum's façade. In 2006, the Czech artist covered the columns of the Art Nouveau portico with a carpet construction. Since then, the artwork has become the museum's trademark.

1000 years of monastic and noble traditions over different eras and in different styles come to life in the princely museums - from medieval times to the present day. The monastic buildings of the secularised imperial abbey of St Emmeram were given to the von Thurn und Taxis princes in 1812 as a future residence. Our visitors are invited to experience aristocratic life in the formerly private state rooms, monastic asceticism in the Romanesque-Gothic cloister (one of the most impressive of its type in Germany), aristocratic travel in the royal stables with their collection of carriages, sleighs and carrying chairs from the 18th to the 20th centuries as well as the finest artistic craft work from the 17th to 19th centuries in the princely treasure chamber.

DOCUMENT KEPLER

The famous astronomer Johannes Kepler (1571-1630), a contemporary of Galileo Galilei and one of the founders of modern natural science along with him, died during a visit to Regensburg on November 15, 1630. The house where he died, located at Keplerstraße 5, has been preserved to this day. Since its conversion into a museum in 1961, it has been presented in an authentically reconstructed form, featuring historical interiors from the 17th century.

In recent years, there has been a comprehensive redesign and reimagining of the museum. The museum now has a new entrance and is completely accessible for people with disabilities. Inside, interesting exhibits such as books, letters, historical instruments, and several media stations, including those related to Kepler's famous three laws, provide insight into Kepler's life and work.

A „Science Lab“ on the top floor also showcases practical aspects of astronomy and invites visitors to participate and experiment.

DOCUMENT SCHNUPFTABAKFABRIK

The “document Schnupftabakfabrik” is truly unique in the rich landscape of Regensburg museums. It was once a medieval patrician house, then later used by ambassadors to the Perpetual Imperial Parliament, and at times by the Princes of Thurn und Taxis. Three of its rooms are preserved with original fittings from the times of the Bernard snuff factory which occupied the building from 1812. This demonstrates the pre- and early industrial processing in what was once Germany's largest snuff factory. Old machinery, the layers of history in the rooms, an incomparable aroma of fine tobacco — the “document Schnupftabakfabrik” is a museum to enthrall all the senses.

STÄDTISCHE GALERIE IM LEEREN BEUTEL

The „Leerer Beutel“ is a municipal cultural center with event rooms and a restaurant, with a jazz club, movie theaters and above all with the Municipal Gallery, which shows art of the 20th and 21st century.

The impressive building with its mighty wooden beams was built around 1600 as the municipal granary. In the 1970s it was converted into a place of art and culture. Since its opening in 1980 it has become a hub for Regensburg's cultural life.

The Municipal Gallery in the Leerer Beutel offers an attractive program on several floors with a newly established permanent exhibition and temporary exhibitions including regional as well as international art.

HAUS DER BAYERISCHEN GESCHICHTE MUSEUM

HAUS DER BAYERISCHEN GESCHICHTE

The House of Bavarian History on Donaumarkt shows the genesis of modern Bavaria. The foyer, which is accessible free of charge, not only invites visitors to stroll between the old town and the Danube: the film in the Panorama Room takes them back to Regensburg of bygone eras. An ideal start for a visit to the museum or a tour of the old town. The museum shop with its regional products and the Bavarian tavern complement the offerings in the foyer.

SPECTACULAR AND TYPICALLY BAVARIAN

The permanent exhibition displays personal memorabilia, spectacular large-scale objects as well as thrilling media installations. It offers historic theatre across 30 stages and eight culture cabinets and tells the story of how Bavaria became a free state and what makes it so special. Across 2500 square meters, we trace Bavaria's development to a modern state, from the Kingdom of Bavaria in 1806, up until today. From the King's crown, that was given to Napoleon through marriage, to Ludwig II's mysterious death, to how Hitler gained popularity in Munich, how guest workers changed Bavaria to a balloon from the DDR that landed in Naila and caused an uproar in Hollywood.

In the cultural cabinets, the focus is on the topic of dialect, famous buildings, and even Bavarian festivities and customs.

Additionally, there are always new special exhibitions and events in the Danube Hall and the museum foyer. The next Bavarian exhibition will open in April 2024.

THE GÄUBODEN MUSEUM

Located in the centre of the fertile Danube basin, the so-called „Gäuboden“, the municipal museum of the same name in Straubing shows the history of one of Germany's regions with the longest uninterrupted continuity of settlement. The exhibits presented go back to the beginning of the settlement in the Neolithic period. By exquisite finds, some of which create a sensation even among the international audience, the museum draws up a complete picture of the fertile Danube basin's settlement history as of approximately 5300 before Christ.

The famous Roman Treasure, a hoard find of the 3rd century after Christ, including elaborately decorated soldiers' face masks, leg protectors and chamfrons, and also statuettes of Roman Gods and everyday objects, attracted international attention, in particular since the museum section of the Roman period is one of the largest in Bavaria. With the inauguration of the most recent section in 2018, which is dedicated to the early Bavarians and displays finds of regionally significant excavations, the Gäuboden Museum has become one of Bavaria's largest exhibitions of archaeological artefacts.

The following sections present the New Town's history: The town's current historical centre was founded in 1218 by Duke Ludwig the Kelheimer and quickly developed into an important administrative seat of the Bavarian dukes and kings.

A real gem of Regensburg hospitality

The Bischofshof am Dom is located right next to the Regensburg Cathedral and the Porta Praetoria, the north gate of the former Roman camp Castra Regina. The hotel and restaurant are popular with young and old and a real gem of Regensburg hospitality. Even at the time of the Perpetual Diet, which met in Regensburg between 1663 and 1806, emperors, kings and ecclesiastical dignitaries liked to stay there. Today, every guest at the Bischofshof am Dom is served like a king, whether he is staying in the hotel with its 87 rooms and suites, in the restaurant or in the beer garden, which is a popular meeting place for fans of Bavarian cosiness, especially in the summer months.

In our restaurant and beer garden we celebrate Bavarian hospitality with international culinary influences. Your conferences, company celebrations and family parties are well taken care of by our professional team. We look forward to welcoming you!

The Sushihaus Regensburg is set at Arnulfplatz at the edge of Old Town. Its location inspires guests to enjoy the idyllic scenery of the Danube and the Oberer Wöhrd on an after-dinner walk through the nearby Inseelpark. Away from the Old Town rush, this is the perfect place to lean back.

Special features

The Sushihaus Regensburg is known as a staple of Asian cuisine in the Cultural Heritage town. The Ngyuen Family has spoiled guests with traditional Japanese sushi creations and dishes for 18 years. The selection of ingredients, the warm and accommodating service and the quality and freshness of their lovingly prepared dishes are all equally responsible for An Nguyen's success.

Traditional Japanese cuisine and the Sushihaus Regensburg are known for a calm and conscious dinner culture. The atmosphere is simple and reduced to essentials, so you can focus on the various sushi specialties. Since everything is prepared to order, the creations wrapped in nori keep both their sophisticated taste and their various nutrients and vital substances.

Since an extensive restructuring in September 2019, the Sushihaus has shown their guests revered Japanese culture in a contemporary urban atmosphere and has connected tradition with modern culture better than most restaurants in Regensburg.

Location

The Olle Gaffel is located right in the centre of the old town, yet somewhat hidden - in the Pustet Passage. In 2023, the cult football pub and best-known Kölsch pub in Regensburg will be celebrating its 30th anniversary, making it a place to be for football enthusiasts and night owls alike.

Special features

Kranz and conference. Only at the Gaffel can you celebrate a Saturday afternoon that way. Football broadcasts from all leagues - some of them international - and Kölsch on tap. This is the pub's simple but tried-and-tested menu. Despite extensive renovation and refurbishment work last year, the Gaffel has kept its original charm. This unique atmosphere unfolds especially when the place is full. If you are looking for a more relaxed evening, you don't have to choose another location, just avoid the top games. Then you can then study the drinks menu in peace and quiet while listening to selected rock music. In addition to a fine selection of beers, the pub offers probably the most unspectacular long drink in town: FaKo - Fanta with Korn.
